Malware

- Malware is a type of harmful software designed to damage or do other unwanted actions on a computer system. Think of it as a bad computer program that can sneak into your device without you knowing, with the intention of causing harm, stealing personal information, or just creating a mess of things.

Phishing

- Phishing is when scammers trick you into giving out personal information like your bank account numbers, passwords, or Social Security number. They might do this through fake emails or websites that look real but aren't. Imagine someone pretending to be a bank asking for your account details to "verify your identity," when they're actually planning to steal your money.

Virus

- Virus is a type of malware that can copy itself and spread from one device to another. Once it gets into your device, it can cause damage, delete files, or allow someone to take control of your computer. It's similar to a biological virus that spreads from person to person, except this one spreads between computers and devices.

Spam

- Spam refers to unwanted emails that flood your inbox, usually trying to sell you something, but can also include scam offers or malware. It's like the digital version of junk mail that clutters up your mailbox at home, except it's in your email and can sometimes be harmful or deceptive.
